Queen Victoria was a prolific correspondent, estimated to have written 2,500 words a day—and 60 million total during her reign. After her death in 1901, two men from the circle of her son King Edward VII, Reginald Brett, 2nd Viscount Esher, and A.C. Benson, a prolific poet and essayist, were given the task of editing her correspondence (i.e., also letters received) from her accession to the throne in 1837 to the death of her husband, Prince Albert, in 1861. Edward VII had final say on the ...
